

*O fairest one, in thee I find my muse,
With charming wit, let banter thus ensue!*

— from “Dulcet”

A slender volume written in the old key. Across ten pieces — sonnet, verse, and prose — a seeker addresses the Beloved through veil, whirlwind, tempest, and cloud: Iris opening the eye of perception, Morrigan riding at daybreak, the Maiden's crest turning beneath Luna's grace, and a dowry given away entire. Each piece carries a Hebrew name, and several arrive with a foreword to light the way in.

Crystal Liberto writes in the old key — sonnet, verse, and prose carried by Hebrew names and a devotional ear. The Sonnet of Lebanon is her first collection.

POETRY · PROSE POETRY · DEVOTIONAL VERSE

[Publisher Name]

[City, Country]

© 2026 Crystal Liberto

ISBN barcode area

[ISBN 000-0-0000000-0-0]